Flange Gaskets & Hardware Kits for Circulating Pumps

Kits help mount the flange to the pump. Gaskets seal the connection, while bolts and screws secure the flange to the pump. These accessories are intended for use with a flange of the same brand and series.

Motors for Circulating Pumps

Motors run on alternating current (AC) to power the pump to move hot water in hydronic heating systems and water recirculation equipment. These motors are intended to replace a motor in a 3-piece circulating pump of the same brand, series, and manufacturer model number. They are commonly used to replace damaged water circulator motors.

Repair Parts for Circulating Pumps

These replacement parts should match the brand, series, and manufacturer model number of the pump.

Bearing assemblies sit between the motor and pump casing and transfer the power generated by the motor to the pump's impeller.

Seal and gaskets keep the circulating pump's motor and bearing assembly dry by preventing water from exiting the pump body.

Impellers move fluids through the system using centrifugal force.

Motor couplers connect motors to pumps and transfer the power generated by a motor to the pump's impeller.

They provide alignment tolerance of the shaft while the pump is operating.

Motor cartridges are removable from the motor housing and contain the moving parts of the motor, such as the shaft, bearings, and the impeller. The cartridge can be removed and replaced without replacing the pump.

Motor mounts hold and support the circulating pump's motor inside the motor's housing. They work with motor couplers to maintain alignment between the motor and the pump.

Lubricants are used on the bearing assemblies of 3-piece circulating pumps.
